Hunters often follow blood trails to track game animals they've shot with a bow or firearm. Blood trailing is a skill that's particularly important to bowhunters whose targeted animals can cover a fair amount of ground after being hit. This is true even if the shot is clean and fatal. But blood trails provide more than just a trail.

The problem is that the so-called "Trail of Blood" is taken very seriously by some Baptists, even some of those of the Reformed stripe. I ran across a copy of the Trail in a Lifeway Christian bookstore of all places a couple of years ago. And there is a whole chapter in McGoldrick's book dealing with the false claim that St. Patrick was a Baptist.
