The Great Image Has No Form, or On the Nonobject through ... The Great Image Has No Form was inspired by Kouw's visit to the Wudang Mountains in China in 2007, where he studied Chinese meditation and martial arts as a result of his long-time interest in Daoism. “Daoism teaches us that the foundational cannot be named and identified, but rather has to be experienced firsthand”.

The Great Image Has No Form | Matthijs Kouw | Esc.rec. But the supreme art of any culture or age is bound to share this Chinese doctrine: the great image has no form. An Edward Hopper painting still haunts us with the beautifully unsaid. This, I should like to believe, speaks to the innate character of Lawrence, and one must appreciate it in order to understand his architecture.
